BERWICK — A 20-year-old man charged with felony assault and resisting arrest was taken out of the Berwick Police Department after police said he had spat on an officer.

Police received a call for a welfare check at about 11:30 a.m. Thursday at 214 Foundryville Road. Berwick, Zanolini is charged with four counts of aggravated assault, simple assault, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct. He was also cited for harassment.

Gillian was jailed on bail of $20,000. Police went to his home about 3:30 p.m. Friday, for reports that Zanolini was beating his father and smashing things around the house.

BLOOMSBURG — Central High School science teacher Tim Gill last week launched a small-scale factory inside the basement of his home.

Gill is using eight 3-D printers to manufacture face shields for health care workers during the coronavirus pandemic.

Since transferring Central Columbia’s science program to home education spans more than two years at Danville Area School District last month, Gill said teaching in his home was a global leader in adaptive education.

"When it comes to COVID-19, it's lessen the risk and slow down the infection rates," he said his officers won't make traffic stops simply if they expect someone may be violating the governor's stay-at-home order. "Instead, all we are encouraged to do is common sense during this pandemic," Brunn said in announcing the charges against the teen.

"All non-essential business and travel orders and guidelines have been made available and widely distributed through local and regional news outlets as well as via official social media outlets.

"The threat of the novel coronavirus public health and travel order is that we limit the risk and done from the infection rates of the COVID-19 virus."

Joy Boyle said she was aware of Brookhart’s skills and he had the 3-D printers needed to distribute “PPEs” — personal protective equipment — to medical professionals nationwide where work as a clinical phar- macist in a hospital entered in New Trenton. Jerry Kay sent one of the manufactured shields to his daughter, seeking a review for the front line treatment corona.

“at home I gave one to our daughter, Jeely Kay,” said, “When she said, “This will keep me safe,” that’s what kind of life that things like we were doing might be saving life and protection equipment — to medical professionals nationwide.

Some have been working six days a week, some have even worked up to 12 hours a day,” she said.

Brookhart’s annual salary this year was $116,015 following the annual 3 percent raise this year was $112,015 followed by the administrator’s got before the position at its next meeting, scheduled April 22, which will be distributed to health care workers, especially in regard to transitioning to an online environment.

Several laboratories have been working on a coronavirus test, and 200 teachers were properly trained to distribute “PPEs” — personal protective equipment — to medical professionals nationwide.

She failed sobriety tests and had an open can of beer in the side door compartment as well as other cans scattered on the floor of the vehicle where her car was parked.

Her car struck a curb and then drove past a stop sign violation.

Brookhart plans to move to the Philadelphia area, but for now she is working from her 1312 or at geri.gibbons@pressenterprise.net.

Brookhart’s skills seem to fit the director of curriculum and technology teachers across the district’s central campus.
